

Art in Review; Desired Constellations

By ROBERTA SMITH
Published: August 5, 2005

Daniel Reich
537A West 23rd Street, Chelsea
Through today

Given this show's title and its news release, which cites the annual transglobal migration of the monarch butterfly, the life instinctual seems to be the theme of this group show, which has been organized by Meredith Darrow, the gallery's director. But some instincts, at least as seen here, are more interesting than others.

Animals abound, in formats ranging from excessive factuality (Michelle Elzay's handsome photographs of falcons) to excessive cuteness (Misaki Kawai's bunny-rabbit airplane). Jon Pylpynchuk's furry sculptures of a bewildered cat and bird and Laura Owens's painting of a squirrel in a folk-art tree find a better balance.

There are intimations of cosmic experiences in Elliot Hundley's "Medea's Craft," a delicate white-on-white assemblage that brings to mind Joseph Cornell and Greg Colson, and Greg Smith's fastidious painting of a skeleton urinating in a lake, which suffers from an overreliance on older art in both subject and technique.

Leaning a little too much on Edward Gorey is a fey ink drawing of a figure confronting a strangely rooted (and charted) Rorschach shape that suggests both a tree and a sky map by Alex Cardenas, who until recently provided the collective Lansing-Dreiden with its sly, distinctive graphic style. Tyson Reeder's colorfully blurred painting of scattered dirty clothes suggests nocturnal abandon; Peter Coffin's even blurrier atmospheric abstraction is explained, but not really justified, by its title: "Aura Portrait." Paul Heyer's small, bright semi-abstract tondo painting is appealing but generic; it suggests instincts that have yet to clarify themselves. ROBERTA SMITH

- FACEBOOK
- TWITTER
- GOOGLE+
- EMAIL
- SHARE
- PRINT
- REPRINTS

MOST EMAILED

RECOMMENDED FOR YOU

We don't have any personalized recommendations for you at this time. Please try again later.

Log in to discover more articles based on what you've read.

Log In Register Now

What's This? | Don't Show

FACEBOOK | TWITTER | GOOGLE+ | EMAIL | SHARE

SCHOLARSHARE
CALIFORNIA'S 529 COLLEGE SAVINGS PLAN

Click to open your account today.

TIAA-CREF Individual & Institutional Services, LLC, member FINRA, distributor and underwriter for the ScholarShare College Savings Plan.

C37360